

THE WOMB OF REQUIREMENT

Penelope Perk was a sixth year at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry. A Ravenclaw with a passion for runes, potions, and Edwin Redwin. Edwin was a little guy, probably lucky if he tipped the scales at eight stone. He was muscled though, probably the quickest Beater the Hufflepuff Quidditch team had ever seen. But as fast as his body was, his tongue was faster. Penelope, quiet, and maybe big enough to outweigh two Edwin Redwin's together, figured he was best admired from afar.

Penelope had come to appreciate her own ungainly beauty in the last year though. She was tall with silky, straight hair, and she even liked her eyes. So had all of her previous boyfriends, though, in the end, she hadn't liked any of them that much.

Six weeks ago, much to her surprise, she found out that Edwin Redwin had a passion for her as well. A passion that, two weeks ago, among the droppings, pellets, and tiny bones of consumed rodents of the owlery, had somehow magically transformed into a something a lot more physical. They were both consumed by their affection and hadn't spent more than eight hours apart for weeks, spending as much time laughing and sharing as they did silently engrossed in one another.

Until last week, Penelope needed some space; at least, that's what she said. She